INTRODUCTION

The sites listed in this publication are included in An Inventory of Gardens and Designed Landscapes in Scotland, at March 2007. In addition to those sites detailed in the original Inventory published in 1988, it also includes additional sites which have been identified as meriting Inventory status.

HISTORIC SCOTLAND'S STATUTORY ROLE

Historic Scotland is, on behalf of Scottish Ministers, responsible for:

Identifying ancient monuments, archaeological sites and marine wrecks of national importance, and compiling and maintaining a schedule of such:

Identifying buildings of special architectural or historic interest, and compiling and maintaining lists of such:

Dealing directly with applications for scheduled monument and marine consent and management agreements and, referrals from local authorities for listed building consent and conservation area consent.

Unlike monuments and buildings there is no primary legislation in place, at present, that gives protection to nationally important gardens and designed landscapes. Inventory status is not a statutory designation. However, The Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) (Scotland) Order 1992 (the GDPO) requires planning authorities, prior to granting planning permission, to consult Scottish Ministers on “development which may effect a historic garden or designed landscape”. This means that inclusion of a site in the Inventory is a material consideration in the planning process and any planning proposal that would affect a site included in the Inventory must be referred to Scottish Ministers (through Historic Scotland) and Scottish Natural Heritage.

A recent review of Scottish Natural Heritage has suggested that Historic Scotland should take on sole responsibility for compiling the Inventory and responding to planning applications. Scottish Ministers plan to carry this out at the earliest legislative opportunity. At the time of writing work is in progress to make the necessary changes to the GDPO.

BACKGROUND TO AND PURPOSE OF THE INVENTORY

The early 1980s saw an increasing awareness of the significant contribution which many gardens and designed landscapes make to the quality of our environment. They can be valuable assets at national, regional and local level. They are:

- An invaluable resource for art and design, as living examples of unique artistic talent in garden and landscape design that include what are considered to be some of the finest gardens in the world:
- Part of the scenery of Scotland, adding to the public enjoyment of the countryside either seen from a distance as part of the wider tapestry of a view, or close-to from the artistic framing of a garden setting:
- An important historic resource, reflecting centuries of social and economic change and containing architectural and archaeological heritage assets:
- Rich wildlife havens where loch, wetland, woodland, gorge and moorland habitats may have been protected and undisturbed for years and often now incorporate Sites of Special Scientific Interest:
- Repositories of valuable and rare plant collections, often housing the original plant material brought back by important plant hunters. These collections are propagated from and in some cases can help a species survive back in the wild:
- Valuable assets for attracting tourists to Scotland and as a recreational resource, often incorporating stately homes, museums and ancient monuments, or simply as parks and gardens for peoples' use and enjoyment:

In 1982 the predecessor bodies of Historic Scotland and Scottish Natural Heritage (the Inventory sponsors) commissioned a study of a sample of sites from which criteria could be derived for the assessment of gardens and designed landscapes. In 1984 work began on the compilation of the Inventory and the resulting five volume work was published in 1987. In 1993 the sponsors commenced a programme to extend its coverage. This programme continues although, as noted above, production and maintenance of the Inventory will become the sole responsibility of Historic Scotland.

The Inventory is intended to identify gardens and designed landscapes of national importance. There are many threats to such sites, often through development such as road building, new industry or housing. The Inventory is intended to be used as part of the planning process to inform decisions. For more than 20 years government has recognised the need to identify the nation's most important gardens and designed landscapes. Scottish Ministers are committed to maintaining the Inventory and will continue to develop and review it.

SITE SELECTION

The assessment criteria used when considering a site for inclusion in the Inventory are:

- Value as an individual work of art.
- Historical value.
- Architectural value.
- Horticultural, arboricultural or silvicultural value.
- Scenic value.
- Nature Conservation value.
- Archaeological value (since 1993).

Sites are awarded a merit within each category: Outstanding; High; Some; Little; None. The level of merit is judged by panel of experts - The Inventory Steering Group - membership of which, in addition to the sponsors, includes representatives of The Royal Botanic Garden, The National Trust for Scotland and The Garden History Society in Scotland. At the time of writing Scottish Ministers are considering whether an advisory group covering wider interests would be more appropriate.
